

For my final project, I want to tell the fictitious truth about how a There is a secret society whose purpose is to keep society as well as the population in check. These people question society, how it's built and how it operates and once upon a time get people asking questions about society as well as themselves. Their purpose is to help the world by not only protecting them from potential disasters or problems that they might face but find a way to improve and enhance their lives. The secret society also has scientists whose purpose is to find ways to improve the quality of life for everyone. Their goal is to have society itself evolve in a way that benefits both the citizens, as well as the people running the secret society. The reason why this interests me is because with the current climate in life, I want to create this idea that there is a secret club that not only tries to cover this, but fix it as well. This is something that I want to explore more in this project like its history, where it is, how many people are there, and can you become a member.

This secret Society is made up of people who were previously ostracized from society and decided to create what they call a "Shadow society". The Shadow Society is made up of several positions. First there is the leader who is labeled as the expert in society, culture, and economics. Then there are the researchers who look for new information to show the leader. Next there are the scientists. Unlike the researchers, scientists focused more on studying the human body, the chemicals we consume, and the weather. The scientist for sheep brings data which would be sent to the leader and sees if it goes into good use or not. The secret Society's population is slowly growing as more and more people feel unsatisfied with the society that they are in so they decide to start over. In order to become a member of the Secrets Society, there are three things that you need to do. The first thing is that you need to have extensive knowledge with economics and social classes. then you need to have proof that you were ostracized from regular society. The final requirement is that you need to distance yourself from your friends and family and pretend like you're dead. Overall, getting into the secret society takes lots of working research in order to join.

This project can become the "benevolent untruth" because the idea of a secret Society sounds like a conspiracy theory made up by a person with way too much time in their hands. Even though there are lots of problems in society, instead of creating a new society, we deal with the problems that we currently face. The idea of this secret Society also wouldn't make sense practically. Once there are enough people that join this so-called secret society, somebody will find out and this underground society will not be secret anymore. Also, why would scientists go to a different society when they could stay in regular society so they could be around not only people around them, but a wide variety of people. It would seem like this would serve a small group of people that would join this so-called secret Society. Even the idea that you have to put up with everything you have seems very cult-like. Even if it was true, once people find out that the new society is better. Everyone will flock there and things would stay the same as it never happened so the idea of society would be pointless and a waste of time and resources. Overall, the benevolent untruth is that there is no such thing as a secret society.
